

Job's Loss of Reputation

By Brian Coatney

In starting back through Job, I notice he begins well in his faith; he stands the loss of family and health, and even replies well to Betty's exhortation to curse God and die.

Then his three friends do not hold him in respect. My. Loss of reputation.

His worst suffering of all is the "view of Job."

Most people can take anything if they are right. But when scorned, well....

We seem to have arrived at the Cross. Who but Jesus knew why he blew the "view of Jesus."

Norman always said that the hardest part of intercession is "loss of reputation." Why? The self.

Job learned to be an intercessor.

He didn't have much choice.

Oh, he did, but what were his options?
